Sarah Vaughan is back on Mercury! The four titles on this EP mark her return to the label and were studio-recorded in Copenhagen August 7th 1963, when „the divine Sarah“ was the top-attraction at the Tivoli Variety. As you may hear for yourself, Sarah did a wonderful job with Quincy Jones that day in the studio – just as she did at the Tivoli Variety. After her opening night there the press wrote:

SARAH VAUGHAN – MARVELLOUS VOICE, WONDERFUL GIRL

In a plain white dress she makes her entry. On stage no flamboyant gestures or exaggerated movements, just the sheer power and excitement of her singing captivates the audience . . . Miss Vaughan will not only attract all jazz lovers to the Tivoli, but also those who wish to spend an enjoyable evening at this wonderful performance.

(Berlingske Tidende, 3/8 63)

DIVINE SARAH Jazz singer at the Tivoli Variety transforms pop music into art

This was a different Sarah to the artist who faced the jazz enthusiasts of Juan-les-Pins . . . When we say the performance she gave was not primarily that of a jazz singer, this is no disparagement of her talents, rather it is a compliment to her scope and range as an artist.

(Politiken, 3/8 63)

THANKS FOR SARAH – a gift to all music lovers

She preaches the jazz message and makes even pop music an art. Wear a dinner jacket, stiff collar and have a 100 kroner note in your pocket for a Callas performance if you like – I prefer to sit in ordinary dress and enjoy that wonderful gift of nature, Sarah Vaughan's exciting and far reaching voice!

(Ekstrabladet, 3/8 63)

. . . but the evening belongs to Sarah Vaughan. Whether she under or overtones herself through „Somewhere over the rainbow“, or sings a kittenish duet with her own private orchestra, she is equally magnificent and creates a hush over the audience as in a deep South church before the great Hallelujah bursts forth . . .

(Børsen, 3/8 63)

SARAH VAUGHAN – a fantasy in sound

Sarah Vaughan's performance is a fantasy in sound. She plays around with a couple of more octaves in a wonderful way. Even when she sings the songs we know so well – it is in her own individual style, using her own staggering musical dynamics . . .
